When I replaced my valley pan cover at 109,000 miles, I bought the replacement from my dealer. I rejected the first one they showed me because the gasket was flattened in several places, probably because of the way it had been stored. The second one they showed me looked ok, but it leaked again after 15 mo and 15,000 miles.

The upper pan gasket would require lifting the engine to do the repair. I understand that it takes a commitment to keep our uber-engineered BMW's on the road. I do wonder how something that is as elementary to an engines construction such as an oil pan gasket could be leaking at the 81,000 mile mark.
